About the Publication

The Tucson, Yuma & Flagstaff Major Employers Guide is designed primarily for job seekers considering employment in these areas of the state. It is hoped that this publication will be especially helpful to the many newcomers who are unfamiliar with the “Grand Canyon State” and the location of many of its largest employers. This publication is a companion to the Arizona Job Seekers Guide and lists addresses and telephone numbers of major employers.

Additional lists of employers, as well as other sources of job information, can be found in publications and resources listed in both the Arizona Job Seekers Guide and the LMI Directory — both published by the Department of Economic Security, Research Administration. And finally, if pursuing employment in government, consider obtaining a copy of Applying for Government Jobs from DES, Research Administration at the address shown on page i or visit the nearest Arizona Job Service office.

Throughout Arizona, more than nine of every ten businesses employ fewer than 100 workers, yet they account for only about half the total number of workers. Both locally and nationally, recent years have seen greater employment growth in smaller firms. For this reason, it is recommended that this publication be used in conjunction with other resources to enhance the likelihood of a successful job search.

Provided in this guide is an alphabetical list of the largest employers in metropolitan Tucson, Yuma, and Flagstaff. The list indicates the primary activity of each employer as well as the address, telephone number (usually a job hotline), and an Internet address when available. Also indicated is a grid index that can be used to determine each employer’s location on the accompanying map.

This employer guide also includes addresses of full-service One-Stop Career Centers located in metropolitan Tucson, Yuma, and Flagstaff. These centers provide customers with a wide range of employment and training programs and services.

When using this publication, please note following:

- The employers list usually provides a map location of the primary site or plant and the phone number of the hiring facility.
- The map location for businesses with more than one location is shown as “Multiple Sites.”

If hiring for all locations is done at one site, that address and its map location is also provided.

- Employer-locator maps are not to scale and do not include all streets. Therefore, the maps should be only used to find general locations.
- Included with the maps are areas designated “Major Pockets of Employment,” where concentrations of employment can be found. A legend preceding the map lists major industry groups (e.g., manufacturing, retail trade) associated with each pocket of employment. For the most part, businesses in the industries specified will be found in these areas, but companies in other industries are located in these pockets as well.

About Metropolitan Tucson

Pima County, the state’s second-most populated of 15 counties, had an estimated population in 1998 of 824,000 and total employment of about 362,000. By the year 2000, Research Administration projects the county’s population will grow to 854,000, with employment reaching nearly 400,000. Between 1990 and 1998, population and employment in metropolitan Tucson expanded 24 and 22 percent, respectively (compared to 30 and 28 percent for the state).

Unlike the Phoenix metropolitan area, where there are a number of cities with populations of more than 100,000, Pima County has only one major incorporated area. The city of Tucson accounts for nearly 60 percent of Pima County’s population and is followed by Oro Valley, with a population of 25,500. Interestingly, in 1990 more than 37 percent of Pima County’s residents lived in unincorporated areas (outside of towns and cities), compared to about 7 percent in Maricopa County.

In 1998, service-producing sectors accounted for nearly 84 percent of the county’s wage and salary employment, with 90 percent of those jobs in trade, services, and government. The dominance of the trade and services sectors reflects, in part, the county’s strong tourism industry and growing retirement communities. More than 71,000 in Pima County are employed in government, 11,000 of which work at the University of Arizona.

Manufacturing employment in Pima County dropped steadily from the mid-1980s through 1993 — due largely to cuts in defense spending. But manufacturing employment rebounded strongly over the next several years — increasing nearly 26 percent by the end of 1998 — due, in part, to Hughes Missile Co. consolidating its operations in Tucson. An increasing population and the resulting demands for more services and construction, along with continued expansion in manufacturing, will fuel continued employment growth. The mining sector (primarily copper), once a major source of jobs in Pima County, now accounts for less than 1 percent of the county's wage and salary employment.

In 1998, Pima County's major industry employment profile was as follows: manufacturing, 29,000, 8.9%; mining, 2,200, 0.7%; construction, 20,000, 6.1%; transportation, communications, and public utilities (TCPU), 13,500, 4.2%; trade, 70,300, 21.6%; finance, insurance, and real estate (FIRE), 13,100, 4.0%; services, 106,300, 32.7%; and government, 71,100, 21.8%. According to preliminary data, average annual pay in the Tucson metropolitan area (MA) and Arizona in 1998 was $26,767 and $29,264, respectively.

About Yuma and Yuma County

The western Arizona city of Yuma, which borders the Colorado River and California, saw its resident population jump 13,200 (24 percent) between 1990 and '98. Although metropolitan Yuma (which includes all of Yuma County) was designated as the state's third metropolitan area (MA) in 1990, the county ranks as Arizona's sixth most populated.

The economy of Yuma and Yuma County is primarily dependent on three industries — agriculture, defense, and tourism (services and retail trade). Because tourism and agriculture are seasonal, employment in Yuma County swells in the winter. Employment in Yuma County in January is one-third higher than in July.

Agriculture accounted for about one-third of the county's total employment of 48,400 in 1998. A variety of crops — lettuce, melons, alfalfa — are grown in the fertile Gila River valleys of Yuma County and shipped to western states and Mexico.

Defense-related employment is primarily located at the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station in the southeast part of the city and the Army's Yuma Proving Ground to the north. While not likely to increase significantly because of declining defense budgets, employment at the Yuma air base may rise due to the transfer of operations from several closed bases around the country.

Trade and services, which accounted for more than half of Yuma County's 39,000 wage and salary jobs in '98, figure to play an even larger role into the 21st century for two reasons — increased tourism and an expanding Mexican economy. Yuma County is attracting increasingly large numbers of winter visitors, some of whom are seeking a more rural setting than is offered in the Phoenix and Tucson metro areas. Also, Yuma's economy continues to benefit from expanding manufacturing operations along the Mexican border, 50 miles to the south. National retailers continue to expand in Yuma County in anticipation of more trade from Mexicans crossing the border to buy goods. Manufacturing plays a relatively minor role in the Yuma-area economy, accounting for about 5 percent of wage and salary jobs.

In 1996, Yuma County's major industry employment profile was as follows: manufacturing, 1,800, 4.6%; mining, 25, 0.0%; construction, 2,700, 7.0%; TCPU, 1,300, 3.3%; trade, 11,500, 29.6%; FIRE, 1,200, 3.2%; services, 8,800, 22.7%; and government, 11,500, 29.6%. According to preliminary data, average annual pay for the Yuma MA in 1998 was $20,094, about $9,000 below the state average. A small manufacturing base and large number of agricultural jobs account for much of the wage differential.

About Flagstaff and Coconino County

Flagstaff's estimated population of 60,000 in 1998 accounts for nearly half of the residents of Coconino County. While not expanding as fast as some Arizona cities — due to limited land and a more conservative view of growth — population in Flagstaff nevertheless increased nearly 31 percent between 1990 and '98. The average population increase during that period for all cities and towns in Arizona was 26%.

The economies of Flagstaff and Coconino County (which includes Grand Canyon National Park) are heavily dependent on tourism and government employment. Tourism (and its related trade and services industries) and government accounted for 83 percent of Coconino County's approximately 53,000 wage and salary jobs in 1998. At 7,000 feet, Flagstaff primarily attracts tourists in summer when daytime temperatures are in the 70s and 80s. The area's rural mountain setting and clean air are, however, luring an increasing number of year-round residents. Northern Arizona University (NAU), with its 16,000 students, and nearby ski facilities tend to stabilize trade and services employment in the winter months. NAU generates several thousand public- and private-sector jobs.

Manufacturing is limited in this predominately rural county, with the logging industry falling on hard times in recent years due to both environmental restrictions and more efficient equipment. The construction sector, however, has seen faster growth as Flagstaff and other communities ease these restrictions to accommodate expanding populations.

The industry employment profile for Coconino County in 1998 was as follows: manufacturing, 3,300, 6.2%; mining, 100, .2%; construction, 2,600, 4.9%; TCPU, 2,000, 3.7%; trade, 13,500, 25.5%; FIRE, 1,100, 2.0%; services, 13,900, 26.5%; and government, 16,300, 31.0%. According to preliminary data, average annual pay in Coconino County in 1998 was $23,801, about $5,500 below the state average.
